holm natatorium, one of the greatest swimming schools in the world. This is the highest school in a country where swimming is a part of the national education. Her diploma shows twenty-three points out of a possible twenty-four, showing her proficiency in aquatic gymnastics. In order to secure this coveted honor the candidate must swim seven miles without resting and swim 300 meters with a brick held in the hand above the water.

It is also required of you to float 500 meters on your back, and to tread 500 meters. You must be able to swim 500 meters with all your clothes on—cloak, hat, gloves and shoes included—and rescue a person ten pounds heavier than yourself. Then you must be able to make a long dive and to jump fifty feet from a tower into the water. Mme. Liljenstolpe makes head-down dives from a sixty-five-foot elevation (into ten feet of water), and beautiful backward dives from thirty feet above the water. She allows herself to be bound hand and foot, and, diving into the water, disengages herself as skillfully as a magician in the mystic cabinet.

HOW TO BUY MEAT.

Scientific Tips on What Part of the Beef Animal to Choose.

From the New York Tribu Slowly but surely rapid transportation and increased facilities of every kind for moving food from one part of the world where it is plentiful to another part v here It is scarce are solving the food question of the earth. It is not difficult for the poorest people in the land to get abundant material for nourishment. The chief obstacle in the way of wholesome living lies in the ignorance of the individuals who purchase and prepare the food. The old proverb that "God sends the food and the devil sends the cook" is as true to-day as it ever was. As a rule, our poorest people are well acquainted with all the best and choicest cuts of meat, but know little about preparing a savary stew or a rich vegetable broth from the less expensive but equally wholesome joints and cuts. The expensive tenderloin, so highly esteemed by the French because of its tenderness, is a piece which should always be regarded with suspicion, unless it is taken from the choicest steer beef. It lies inside the animal, and the blood does not flow through it as freely as it does through the round cr upper part of the leg and through the chuck or shoulder.

The cysticerci of taenia are found in the upper part of the leg and through the chuck or shoulder.

The cysticerci of taenta are found in the liver and in the tenderloin and tender inner muscles of inferior old animals long denizens of the barnyard. Country people and poor people in our cities are apt to buy this beef because it is cheaper than prime steer beef. In the country little steer beef can be found. The mass of the animals killed in the country are cows past their usefulness for dairy purposes and lattened for the market. A considerable portion of cow weef reaches the cheap markets of the city, and there is no special danger in cating it if the liver and internal muscles, including the tenderloin—just the part most popular—are avoided. The tougher, cheaper, but more nutritious parts, like the neck, round and roasts, should be used, and should always be cooked thoroughly. If this is done, even the inner muscles and liver may be used without danger, as sufficient heat destroys all germs of any parasite that affects meat.

Beef, pork and rabbits seem to be especially liable to the cysts of taenia. "Measly" pork means pork containing little round cysts filled with the cysticerci of a certain kind of taenia. Good young steer beef of the Durham or shorthorn breed, such as is fattened on corn on western farms, and constitutes the mass of the prime beef of New York markets, is not liable to the cysts of taenia, and this disease is one almost unknown among the class of people cysts of taenia, and this disease is one almost unknown among the class of people who are always served with this meat. A physician in extensive practice among the homes of New York, where prime beef is used, may never have a case of taenia, though the disease is not an uncommon one among people who eat inferior cow beef. This is one of the reasons why it is better to buy the inferior cuts of 'he best beef rather than the best cuts of inferior beef. It is beggars' economy to buy inferior meat of any kind.

Prince Kropotkin in the New York Post.

During my trip in Canada I have re peatedly been asked whether there is any probability that Siberia should soon become great wheat-experting country, capable states and Canada. And now I am asked on different sides whether there is any truth in the statement of the Russian minister of ways and communications, Prince Hikoff, to the effect that "Siber'a never has produced and never will produce wheat and rye enough to feed the Siberian population"—this statement having been quoted by Mr. C. Wood Davis in this month's Forum, in a very interesting article on "The Impending Deficiency of Breadstuffs." With regard to the past it is perfectly true; and with regard to the future it may have been put in a somewhat too. it may have been put in a somewhat too absolute form, but it is substantially cor-

Altogether, it appears from very careful modern researches that the grain-exporting capacities of the Russian empire have been very much exaggerated. The considerable quantities of grain which are exported at the present time do not represent a corresponding surplus of present and present a corresponding surplus of present and present a corresponding surplus of present according to the considerable present according to the c are exported at the present time do not represent a corresponling surplus of production over and above the needs of the population; and the latest researches tend to prove more and nore that the yearly corsumption of wheat and rye per head of population in Russia would no more than equal the annual consumption of wheat per head in western Europe if no wheat per head in western Europe if no wheat and rye were at all exported and the total crop of these two cereals were consumed within Russia itself.

The question of the grain-producing capacities of the Russian empire is one of intense interest, but it is too complicated to be discussed in a few lines only.

Rat's Ride on Trolley Pole. From the Atlanta Constitution.

A scene of fun and excitement was witnessed this morning about 7:30 o'clock on Whitehall street, south of Alabama street, in front of one of the largest dry goods stores in the city. A crowd of youngsters had, though the hour was early, been busily rat hunting among the debris of rags and paper which had been cast cut of the stores, and the fruits of the chase were being tied by their tails and fed to terriers, which were much in evidence.

One of the boys, in swinging a rat about by a string, inadvertently let go his hold and the string became wrapped about the trolley wire, leaving Mr. Rat suspended be-tween heaven and earth. As he swung there he made repeated and desperate ef-forts to free himself by twisting about and endeavoring to graw the string but all to endeavoring to gnaw the string, but all to 1.0 purpose. The crowd stood and watched the strange scene with interest, while many efforts were being made to free the rodent from his unpleasant position.

A negro came out of the store with a proum and after many "westere" et the broom, and, after many "swipes" at the animal, gave it up for a bad job. Then another negro appeared upon the scene, armed with a blacksnake whip, which he plied with grace and skill, the reports sounding on the morning air like those of a pistol. The rat was struck reported by a pistol. The rat was struck repeatedly by the cruel lash, but still the string heid.

Presently the trolley car came along, and to the astonishment and delight of the crowd, which by this time had assumed No buffet should be without a bottle of Dr. Siegert's Angostura Bitters, the world-renowned appetizer and invigorator—of exquisite flavor.
